

2016 Season Review

Eight women's football leagues took the field in 2016, the most in any calendar year since 2002. The WFA ambitiously split into three tiers of play, and in the top tier, the league had a repeat champion for the first time. WFA2 saw a founding member win a second national title, and WFA3 featured an exciting championship game. In the IWFL, last year's heartbreak turned into historic dominance for the league's newest champion. The WSFL rebranded into the USWFL and for the second straight year, a longtime franchise claimed their first crown. The NMAFL-W and WXFL continued to develop in their second seasons, and the LAFL debuted with a four-team league.

Women's Football Alliance (WFA) – 2016 Season

The WFA split into three tiers of play in 2016, mimicking the structure used by the IWFL when it was the top league in women's football from 2008-2010. Despite that massive structural change, the 2016 WFA championship provided an air of familiarity. For the first time in WFA history, the WFA championship game was a repeat of the previous season's title game, and also for the first time, the WFA had a repeat champion. The D.C. Divas edged the Dallas Elite in a very competitive contest for the second straight year to capture the WFA crown; in addition to being the first team to win consecutive WFA championships, the Divas became the first women's football team to win back-to-back major national titles since the Boston Militia in 2010-2011.

Women's Football Alliance Tier II (WFA2) – 2016 Season

The WFA created a “Division II” level for mid-market teams in 2016, and WFA2 began as a national league with 18 teams to its credit. The Tampa Bay Inferno took an undefeated record all the way to the first WFA2 championship game, but they were taken down in the title match by the St. Louis Slam. The Slam, who won the inaugural WFA championship in 2009, captured the WFA2 crown for their second national title in franchise history.

Women's Football Alliance Tier III (WFA3) – 2016 Season

The WFA also created a “Division III” level for small-market teams in 2016. WFA3 started as a small 12-team league, and the Acadiana Zydeco squared off against the Richmond Black Widows for the first WFA3 title. The Zydeco rallied from a halftime deficit and then turned back Richmond’s game-tying two-point conversion attempt with 12 seconds remaining to claim the inaugural WFA3 championship.

Independent Women's Football League (IWFL) – 2016 Season

With the offseason departure of the Pittsburgh Passion, the Utah Falconz were tabbed as overwhelming favorites to win their first national title in the IWFL. They more than lived up to those expectations, becoming the first team in women's football history to win a national championship by triumphing in every contest by more than 35 points. The Falconz clinched the championship by defeating the Minnesota Vixen, who were making their first national championship game appearance since their inaugural season back in 1999.

United States Women's Football League (USWFL) – 2016 Season

The WSFL and W8FL both folded after the 2015 season, with those leagues reorganizing as the USWFL beginning in 2016. The league's rebranding effort was accompanied by a lot of franchise turnover, but the USWFL still featured a competitive seven-team league in 2016. The Cincinnati Sizzle, who had never won a playoff game in their previous 11 seasons of existence, won two in the USWFL playoffs, topping the New England Nightmare for their first league title.

New Mexico Adult Football League – Women’s Division (NMAFL-W) – 2016 Season

The NMAFL-W expanded beyond the New Mexico border in 2016, picking up the Colorado Springs Voodoo to help round out a five-team league. The previously undefeated Roswell Destroyers were upset in the 2015 NMAFL-W playoffs to deny them the league title, but they would finish the job in 2016, holding off the Voodoo in overtime for their first league championship.

Women’s Xtreme Football League (WXFL) – 2016 Season

The Oklahoma-based WXFL expanded to five teams in 2016 and picked up a couple of teams from neighboring Kansas, including the longtime women’s football mainstay Kansas City Storm. But even with a larger pool of teams, the Oklahoma City Lady Force were the class of the league, once again going undefeated en route to their second straight WXFL championship.
